What are the main ingredients of a Radix meal?

With an emphasis on nutrient density, our meals are comprised of all-natural plant ingredients. Fruit and vegetables provide our meals with a great source of prebiotic fibres, vitamins and minerals. Our carbohydrates are derived from quality sources such as grains and seeds, with no added sugar. Fatty acids are sourced from high polyphenol extra virgin NZ olive oil and seeds such as sunflower, chia and flaxseed. We increase the protein content of our meals by adding Plant Protein DIAAS Complex 1.30, made from a blend of yellow pea protein and brown rice protein. Break options include a Whey Protein DIAAS Complex 1.61 alternative for even higher protein quality. Meals are flavoured with a range of natural herbs and spices, with no artificial flavours, colours or preservatives.

How do I prepare a Radix meal?

All you need to prepare a Radix meal is hot water. The amount required is shown on the back of a meal pack.

You can make a Radix meal simply by adding boiling water. Stir thoroughly to mix water into ingredients, seal bag and leave for five minutes. Tear second line to create a bowl. Enjoy!

Breakfasts can be prepared with either hot or cold water and only require 1 minute wait time.

Is your packaging recyclable?

Yes, Radix Nutrition's packaging is recyclable under soft plastics recycling schemes.

How are Radix Meals produced?

Starting with design, Radix Nutrition's in-house team of food technologists and nutritionists reference the latest in nutritional science alongside experiences gained in many disciplines of human performance. This close association guides their nutrition design work, helping them create products that move customers closer to the ideal of human nutrition.

Radix Nutrition's manufacturing facility is a HEPA filtered, humidity and temperature controlled clean-room. They utilise biometric access control and strict food safety and quality systems to ensure products meet an incredibly high standard. Where possible, they source snap-frozen ingredients to seal in the quality and freshly harvested product. These are finely milled and then preserved using advanced freeze-drying technology, eliminating the need to use unhealthy additives.

What is the shelf life of a Radix meal?

Radix meals have a shelf life of 2 years. Thanks to our advanced freeze-drying technology, they achieve this with absolutely no preservatives.

Are Radix meals suitable for children?

Absolutely! Radix meals are made with all natural ingredients and are the perfect stress free meal option for children and busy parents.
